Falling

Beatrix Gates

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss23/18

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in CutBank by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mso.umt.edu.
Falling

I

The mare shies under me streaming sideways my knees fold and unfold like wings against the dark leather.
The curb and snaffle lace through my fingers and my palms bristle with her gray mane. I lean against the center of gravity: her long dappled shoulders whitewater over her bones.

A shot in the open field,
she rears up, eyes
white the hunter in her washed away the quick blue flashing of her metal shoes.
As I fall, I look through my hands, see flags of light reins loose ribbons and want to cover my face.

II

The mare returns to her stall, her dappled coat dotted with indigo, the liniment and salve for her wounds that never heal the ropes that tie her keep her steady on her feet out and far away from the milky webbed walls.

She has splintered two stalls kicking steady as a mule and here paws the floor bald in a few hours, neatly squaring all the hay behind her outside the need for four walls outside her high sensate head.

Her taste instead is for space and she chews the wood to tufts around the latches' glinty screwed-in stubs.

Let out, she runs
over fences, just mended, over ground, just dug over her shadow rippling under her hooves.

III

I wake sitting up. Eyes plunge the dark—the raw current sprints my spine, the unknown breaks in waves vertebrae.

I am afloat on my bed sheets peeled down as she flies by the open window, a trail of tiny bubbles blurring the glass. She's out.

I run to meet her, a spastic swimmer through the doors pawing at the openings.
The cold mud seeps back in the quick impression of her hooves smoothed over.

I listen for the return of hoofbeats.
We stand off—a steady arm raised, points and follows the mare as she looms in and out of the trees.
We run to track her, not to catch her.
She will fall and we are running short of breath.
The frontyard mud sends her down thrashing snake-like on the ground.

Talking low to the mare's deaf dread we pull the knot tight.
She is listening to everything outside this night       the black holes where her hooves have been. Her eyes film the unseen—the drowned birds of her life let themselves down, slow weights that surface in her dapples, the perfect stones with no edges.
Her nostrils deepen red—the thin coat of blood bubbles with her breath. Our hands rise up to touch the mare whose chest is not rising.

We fall away, fence the fear from ourselves, stiffen with the widening of our own sight—no longer one, no longer two, no longer three.