Giotto's Maesta

Carol Cavallaro
Giotto's Maesta

A door, a room, a story.
She begins
by loving the child.
She sits in a dark cape, with the diffused light falling on her face, her darker hands holding the baby unconsciously well, the distance yellow,
her eyes strained with concentration.
She gives off the enormous heat of new perspectives, their rightness frozen

as if in rock.
Everything is tenuously angled, and the closeness of the space is set in her face.
She begins
to turn toward the child.
The painter has fixed her in our eyes so steadily that she is afraid she will fall into the solidity of the earth.

It is hard to hold these tangibilities.
She is unaware of our gaze.
The baby moves his hand on her breast.
She readjusts him, and listens for movements in this world, what corporeality there is.
Her child is what she treasures, not the weighted stillness of the people watching, or what they think, or if they think of her,
mothering him.
Sometimes she feels the cold from the varnish of what frames her umb her face.
She begins
to understand this,
that her gestures to her baby must be small, must be seen only in time.
They will never let her forget who she is.
