Spring 1985

Desire

Elaine Epstein

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss24/31

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in CutBank by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mso.umt.edu.
Desire

Hunger. Nothing satisfies the eye enough. Heron, spruce, a blue isolated cove lures like a net. The world is bait, the eye a snare. Act as an animal would, step timidly into this circle of rough tide and ripe grass. Do you believe I am malicious, that the delicate creature sees itself as prey? A couple glides by in a swelled-up boat. They note rapture in the trees; they witness the shore as they do the fog—all depth and possibility—as if the world were a net through which they slid. We slide into the world's eye, which storms only when we want it.