FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

New instructors joining the Montana State University faculty this fall include Henning Jensen, in philosophy; Merle Garrett, in home economics, and William K. Gibson, in forestry, MSU President H. K. Newburn announced.

Jensen, a native of Denmark, taught at Fresno State College from 1956 to 1961 and at Western Reserve University from 1954 to 1956. At various intervals over the past several years he has done graduate work at Harvard University, where he is a candidate for the Ph. D. degree. After earning a bachelor's degree in 1948 from the University of British Columbia, he held a teaching assistantship for a year at the University of California at Los Angeles.

Miss Garrett will supervise the MSU Home Living Center, a "live-in" laboratory maintained by the Home Economics Department to give students experience in home management. She has taught in Kodiak, Alaska, and Morringsport, La., and from 1957 to 1960 was on the faculty of Abilene Christian College, Texas. She holds a B. S. degree from Louisiana Polytechnic and a master's degree from Colorado State University.

Gibson was a research fellow in the MSU School of Forestry last year while completing work on a master's degree. He earned a B. S. in forestry at MSU in 1952. He was with the Montana State Forestry Department from 1955 to 1958, most recently as assistant state forester. He has been a forester for the Bureau of Land Management, stationed at Lander, Wyo., and Medford, Ore. He served in the Navy from 1946 to 1948.
