FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

The fifth National Defense Education Act Counseling and Guidance Institute at Montana State University will be in session from June 24 through Aug. 16, according to Dr. Robert E. Gorman, institute director.

Dr. Gorman, director of the University Counseling and Testing Service, said MSU is one of 53 schools conducting counseling institutes this summer under contract with the U. S. Office of Education. The MSU institute is supported by a $45,420 NDEA grant.

Thirty secondary school counselors from Montana and other states will attend the institute, the director said. The program provides graduate education to school counselors to improve their professional skills in counseling able students.

Serving on the staff are Dr. Thomas Burgess, associate professor of psychology, MSU; Dale Andersen, NDEA doctoral fellow, Arizona State University; Mitchell Salim, NDEA doctoral fellow, University of Wyoming; Dr. Allen Ivey, director of Bucknell University Counseling Services, and Dr. Gorman.

Visiting special lecturers are Dr. Willis Dugan, professor of education, University of Minnesota; Dr. Lyle Miller, chairman of guidance, University of Wyoming; Dr. Louis Schmidt, chairman of psychology, Orange State College; Dr. William Farquhar, professor of education, Michigan State University; Dolf Jennings, director of guidance services, State Department of Public Instruction, Helena, and Elmore Nelson, U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

At the close of this summer's institute, 125 secondary school counselors will have attended NDEA counseling and guidance institutes at MSU, Dr. Gorman said. Of these, 98 are counselors in Montana high schools.
