All the science notwithstanding, it's still a little like a kiss to me, or what a kiss might lead to.
That first grand expulsion of breath from the lungs hangs there like metaphor given skin, and we almost believe in ourselves some new way. Now and then I bum one, and the rush of dizziness that results turns me woman in memory.
Though I lived in the world I hardly stepped outside myself at all, and women seemed a miracle of confidence.
Once I crossed the street to retrieve the still-smoldering butt a high-heeled, tight-skirted woman had tossed away.
I touched the lipstick-tainted end to my lips, drew, and the fire burned my fingers, the fire she'd taken into herself and sent out into the air around us like a spell.
The first woman who ever let me touch her, a girl really, only seventeen, kissed me so deeply I fell out of myself and became her. In the moonlit backseat I knelt upward and beheld my own eyes in a body of perfection as vulnerable as a child’s. Quick-witted and foul-mouthed ordinarily, she was silent now, even as the moments stretched out toward pain, even when I reached over the front seat and took one of her cigarettes and lit it for myself. When she moved at last it was both arms rising toward me, and absurdly, I handed her the smoke. Perhaps some tatter of cloud passed before the moon just then and in that moment her hands ceased imploring and began simply to accept. Whoever we would be for the next twenty years took residence behind our eyes. With both hands she eased away the cigarette, and the drag she pulled into herself cast a light that left me blind.
