Blood Enough and Time

Mary Vanek
In the center of a cemetery made green as spring by the grey Confederate dead, I sit near midnight, the black dog who guards the place sleeping at my side, cool on the cold cement base of this monument made by the pride of Southern womanhood.
We all pay our debts in different ways.

The story is, where blood’s been spilled ground will speak if we will listen.
I ease a blade through the pad of my thumb, the drops pulse out, and it begins:
wind strong enough to strip brown leaves, a rattle like bones in a clattering bag.
Then nothing. The dog licks his yellow teeth.

I believed they would return, given blood enough and time, but now, steadied by the throb of the wound, I doze, legends dying all around me, the last stroke of the clock tower echoing into silence.
Power comes from what we are,
not what we think we’ll be.
Witness Odysseus staining a trench red for Tiresias, the old man deeply drinking, speaking full of mortal heat.
