Elegy 2

Christopher Janke

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.
Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss54/10

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in CutBank by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mso.umt.edu.
ELEGY 2

You encourage like a cadaver, like a spur, like a heartworm at work in the heart;

you're a beautiful chewer, a terrible want,
the shadow stalled on a meadow.

You make the crickets speak to you,
so I speak— o birch tree peeling,

o truculent finch, o lecher,
o rusty can, o holder of things apart,

o briar bush pushed through my veins,
o seraphic wind— you pass to the left,

to the, right, all the way through,
o worn spot on my knee—

inside and all over.
I walk through the city pinching violets;

I spread oil on my eyes.
I open a manhole; you're inside,

feasting with the forgotten, laurels in your hair and the smell of gin on your lips. On both sides of the street, the world is on fire.

A freighter rests
on the burning stairs.
I greet you with the sound of a knife through lettuce, with seagulls on an ebullient bay, with a quiet kiss in a quiet house.

We were migrants on a flatbed—

I was the wheelless cart you had to pull, the bird with a broken wing that hobbled towards you across the first divide. Now, I'm a child, swung up by both arms,

high enough to fear the gap between my tongue and the ground.