Spring 2007

from Enclosure

Jennifer K. Dick
She went to sleep and grew up and looked at her body and said This was just a reflection...

This was just
She went to sleep

Lili,
she said

Lilies and a basket
Of protection
This call a place
she stopped
This could be she
a voice, she, a voiced

Lili?
Some recognition
Some recollection Take them back Pluck
a few

My,
she said,

The gardener by a white picket
she fenced
She was fenced
in, she said and behind her
clover, take this
and bouquets and baskets Bushels counted on old parchment
Things behind glass
under tape In this museum a collection Egyptian
artifacts, artifactual, anti-or artiface, she claims, signs labor exchange
a ticker-tape-like
recollection dug
up They were
unearthed
In a cave
centuries
a measured
existence
Roles, models, modular re-connection She
fences
the garden Pricks
her thumb
forefinger this rose
those lines
accounting for
To count for or forward and growling
in this dark
she says, nightness,
palms to the surface
so that guard must (Is his back turned
Is he turned back round
Is he watching
To see, to look, to notice)
warn her — Lili?
her voice in the Shadows dimming
the lights to signal
closing
A closure
This deal
is final, he signed, she read how
he’d signed and sealed
each document in red wax sending them rolled off Rolled up
a scroll
a past
She presses her hands
to the fence
Splinters
To the glassed-in box of words
Pages, she whispers, too,
with their too-flat ink
