Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss67/23

This Prose is brought to you for free and open access by ScholarWorks at University of Montana. It has been accepted for inclusion in CutBank by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at University of Montana. For more information, please contact scholarworks@mso.umt.edu.
The young super noted her scar but said nothing: “It’s a walk-up, you know.”

Every night the secretary lay there planning to paint the southern wall blue. She bought a mosquito net and a new toaster.

“The kinkiest you ever made it,” Beth asked at lunch.

“I once made it sober?” she’d said.

She lived there 7 years. The bloodsuckers loved her legs. The room got bad sun. Beth came over for a good Tuesday cry. Suddenly everyone was having a fuck in the morning. She made toast.

Beth finally moved back to St. Paul.

A little bird flew in.

The secretary had a pink grapefruit with sugar or talked in a very high voice or a low voice, drank a wine, watched the war. When a little bird flew in she quickly named it Lilly before it flew out again. She bought a toaster.

At her funeral, the super’s daughter remembered a time her shower had clogged.

“At least,” the super said, “she didn’t mess up the walls.”