Faith

Laura Stott

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Let us know how access to this document benefits you.

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.umt.edu/cutbank/vol1/iss79/35
FAITH

1

The sky changes every evening into clouds, and mountains lean into them. The jungle opens a heart.

Moon rises listening to blood pumping in our small bodies.

Our neighbor, the one with a goat, turns on a radio. And out of the jungle a fox tells us in a strange voice over the strange voices singing, his own story. So much so, we all get up in the night frightened, and stare off into the dark and say, Did you hear that, ma'am?

Listen. It is animal and moon.

There is the song of prayer flailing like pages of night.

2

A Buddhist monk names a girl after a Hindu goddess. Another after a lightning bolt and a lucky moon, and another Christina—

She paints pictures like it's everything she believes in.
Lotus.
Rabbit.
Rose.

She wants to be a disc jockey.

Deity hangs on a string around her neck—
_for protection._ Small hands, with small warts, hold mine as she tells me the story about Rama—who spent fourteen years in exile for his father's love.

3

The silhouette of mountain
marks a border between heaven and earth, song and flesh.

A strange moth, green and blue, crawls confused across concrete.

I kneel down, maybe for the first time in my life.

There is so much listening and speaking in a world not belonging to anyone reading this.
Least of all, me.

Child, hold God in those hands.