Required texts:
- "Coursepack #1."
- "Coursepack #3."

Course Objectives: to make an enquiry into the various sources, experiences, and types of human knowledge. In essence, we shall engage in a continuing exploration of the primary question "What do we know and how do we come to know what we think we know?" The emphases of the course are engaging in close readings of the primary texts, interpreting, discussing, and writing about those texts.

Essays: As you compose your essays, remember that we will grade you primarily on three components: 1) the quality of your direct response to the question/topic (no fluff, please!), 2) your use of directly pertinent quotations from the texts, and 3) evidence of thought. If at any time you receive a grade of 'C-' or lower on an essay, we require that you make an appointment to review it and discuss strategies for improvement.

Notes & Notebooks: While we suggest that you take notes during class, we request that you do so sparingly (since note taking generally hinders discussion). It will be important to create a course binder in which to keep your essays and notes from our joint classes, discussions, and plenary lectures. You will find this notebook enormously helpful when you review readings and compose your essays.

Attendance: Attendance is crucial. You will find our analyses of texts during class time of great importance, as they will provide material for your essays on each segment. It is also impossible to participate in discussions if you are not present. We do take attendance at each meeting.

Discussion Participation: Participation is also a significant factor in your course grade. After each meeting, we indicate in our rosters which students have contributed to the class discussion (contributing means raising a pertinent question, addressing a question raised (either by the instructors or classmates) during discussion, or directing the discussion toward a fruitful examination). At the end of the semester, the final tally will reflect your level of discussion activity.

Office Hours: Our office hours are listed on the first page of this document. You should always feel at ease to visit our office hours and discuss any aspect of the course you wish. It is important to us that you learn a great deal in this course and that you consider us resources in your education. If office hours should prove difficult times for you, please call to make an appointment.
