Fall 9-1-2000

ENLT 223.03: British Literature in the 19th & 20th Centuries

Robert E. Baker

University of Montana - Missoula, robert.baker@mso.umt.edu
Course Description:

This course is an introductory survey of British literature from the French Revolution through the Second World War. Like any survey, this one is necessarily selective, omitting all sorts of important writers. Our path will unfold as follows: we'll spend the first part of the course reading five major romantic poets; we'll spend the second part of the course studying a few influential Victorian writers; and we'll spend the last part of the course exploring the strange weavings of four or five modernist poets and novelists.

At the end of the semester you should have a basic familiarity with a number of canonical writers, as well as a number of defining orientations, of romantic, post-romantic, and modernist British literature. I also want you to leave the course with an expanded confidence in your ability to think and write about modern poems and novels, some of which are decidedly "difficult." One of my guiding concerns in the course is that each of you, over the next four months, become not only a more perceptive reader but also a more articulate writer. I will try to convince you, if you are not already convinced, that reading well and writing well are closely intertwined arts.

This course requires a good deal of writing as well as a good deal of reading. I encourage you to meet with me throughout the semester to discuss your papers. I'll talk about the assignments in detail as we move along.

If at any point in the semester you have questions about what's going on in class, or about what's expected of you in the course, please don't hesitate to let me know. I'm around.
