BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTE. 292
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The compilation of any comprehensive bibliographic study is best approached as a cooperative undertaking utilizing the skill and labor of many persons. This study is no exception. A great deal of appreciation is felt for the librarians who over the years have maintained state documents in the Montana Historical Society Library in Helena, the University of Montana Library in Missoula, and the Montana State University Library in Bozeman. This compilation would have been very much more difficult had they not performed their work so well. It would not exist at all but for the inspiration and encouragement of Dr. K. Ross Toole, Professor of History at the University of Montana in Missoula.
INTRODUCTION

Purpose and Methodology

This paper has two primary purposes. First, it traces the development of the numerous agencies of Montana state government, and second, it lists as completely as possible at this time the official publications of those agencies.

It is hoped that this might be used as a beginning toward the efficient management of the printed archives of the state of Montana. The design is not intended to follow library precepts; rather, it is structured to reflect accurately what agencies existed and what publications they produced. The organizational format is aimed at providing a suggested classification scheme usable in establishing separate collections of Montana state documents outside the library Dewey decimal system.

The larger purpose of this listing will be realized if persons using it will make note of publications not included that come to their attention and insert bibliographic annotations in their copy or send the information to the State Archivist at the Montana Historical Society in Helena, Montana. In this way, the goal of gaining bibliographic control of Montana's state documents may eventually be reached.

Foundations for this study were formed while serving as Archivist-Intern at the Montana Historical Society in Helena, Montana. Early in 1968 it was decided to establish a separate collection of Montana state documents. This was to be in addition to those cataloged according to the Dewey decimal system in the library's "Montana Collection." An inventory of cataloged documents was made with information for each separate item being carded and filed according to its provenance. Each series was given the same attention with an additional step being the creation of checklists showing the number and date of each issue within the series.

Systematic collection arrangement required a knowledge of the correct name, history and organization of Montana state agencies. This information was then gathered by an exhaustive search of the whole of the Laws of Montana, the Constitution of the State of Montana, all codifications of Montana statutes, publications of the agencies and pertinent references listed in the bibliography. This study should therefore delineate with a high percentage of completeness all the offices and agencies that were created during the course of territorial and state government until March, 1970. Criterion for inclusion as a "State agency" is any state office, officer, department, division, board, bureau, commission and all sub-divisions of each.

Historical data for the various agencies is designed to show the dates they operated, the method of creation, membership, purposes, controlling code provisions, and the reason for its demise if applicable.

The original statutory titles of most Montana state agencies begin with the word board, bureau, commission, department or division. Preceding that the word "State" usually appears. Alphabetical arrangement under such names would have been unrealistic as the designating or key word would be buried out of easy sight. Agency titles in this study are inverted and alphabetized according to the most significant or descriptive word. Ample cross-references are provided from variations of names so that the text should serve as its own agency index.

Divisions are arranged alphabetically under their parent agency according to legal alignment. Blank lines in the division entries are intended to indicate the "stair-step" relationship to the controlling agency. This may not be adaptable to a documents classification system in view of the lengthy and complicated numbering devices that would be required; however, legal relationships are retained in this study for purposes of continuity and to retain cohesion of the body of work performed by state agencies.

Bibliographical mechanics and arrangement were modified to best suit the purposes outlined earlier. Librarians will immediately notice the absence of form entries such as "Laws and Statutes." Constitutional conventions and constitutions and a grouping of all state agencies in one section make up the two major divisions in the list.

Originally, a third section entitled "Collected Documents" listed the contents of a five volume collection of Montana documents. Published under the auspices of the National Association of State Libraries as part of a "Collected Public Documents of the States" project, these volumes contain 101 separate published reports of Montana state officers, boards, and institutions for the years 1892 to 1896. The listing required several pages and failed to yield useful information; therefore, that section was omitted.

Constitutions and constitutional conventions are discussed informally as to background, followed by a listing of the various published issues of the Constitution of the State of Montana. Arrangement under the office of Secretary of State would have been justifiable; however, the peculiar nature of constitutional conventions caused their separation.

All state agencies found to exist from 1864 to March, 1970, are grouped into the second division. Historical entries, as discussed earlier, are followed by a listing of agency publications. The report of each governmental unit is listed first followed by the other serial publications in alphabetical order. Catalog statistics concerning frequency, title changes, unpublished issues, predecessors or successors and other useful information are included. Serials other than reports are alphabetized by the latest or present title in most instances.

Separate publications are listed following the serials in chronological order. For reference purposes, alphabetization would be more desirable; however, in keeping with the purpose of this study, an arrangement scheme that would be viable was adopted. That is, having the ability to receive future publications without disturbing existing classifications. Separate publications have more detailed entries than serials. The title, author if applicable, general size, paging, content of illustrations, tables and diagrams, and imprint are given.

A definition of "State document," as observed in this list, was provided by the 1967 state legislature in an act creating a state publications distribution center within the State Library:

"'Print' includes all forms of printing and duplicating, regardless of format or purpose, with the exception of correspondence and interoffice memoranda."
"State publication' includes any document, compilation, journal, law, resolution, bluebook, statute, code, register, pamphlet, list, book, proceedings, report, memorandum, hearing, legislative bill, leaflet, order, regulation, directory, periodical or magazine issued in print, or purchased for distribution, by the state, the legislature, constitutional officers, any state department, committee or other state agency supported wholly or in part by state funds."1

This list was not intended as a location guide during its initial compilation. The great majority of the entries were compiled from material found in the Montana Historical Society Library. The file created there was checked item by item against the holdings of the University of Montana Library in Missoula. The latter had a great many of the ones found in Helena, especially the more contemporary documents. An estimated twenty per-cent of the entries in this list were gained in Missoula, but the Historical Society has the more complete collection. Bibliographical references also provided a great many listings. All items listed have been physically seen and inspected with the exceptions of those having annotations to the contrary. Other repositories in the state were not consulted, despite an early intention to do so, because of limitations posed by financial and time factors. Annotation as to location may occur after distribution of this study.

No probability exists that this, the first comprehensive bibliography of Montana state documents, will be in any sense a popular or widely read volume. Indeed, it can hardly be "read" at all in the general sense of the term. Neither can a dictionary. Yet dictionaries and bibliographies are among the indispensable tools of worthwhile achievement in letters and science. It is hoped that this will prove itself a useful tool; one that may provide an impetus for further work in organizing the archives of the great state of Montana.

Montana Territory, organized by act of Congress approved by President Abraham Lincoln, May 26, 1864, became the forty-first state of the Union under the proclamation of Benjamin Harrison on November 8, 1889. During its existence as a territory, three constitutional conventions were held.

The first, called without authority of law, resulted from the petition of a number of citizens. Acting Governor Thomas Francis Meagher issued a proclamation on January 19, 1866, calling an election to select members for a convention to meet in Helena, Montana. This duly elected group met April 9, 1866, and completed its work on April 14. General opinion among present day authorities considers the result to have been largely a copy of the Colorado constitution.

This convention presents several perplexing problems to the student of history, for no minutes were preserved, the constitution produced never came into print, and the original copy is lost. Contemporary newspapers neglected to print either the proceedings of the convention or the constitution in full. A constitution was drafted and the completed manuscript taken by Thomas E. Tutt, a member from Edgerton County, to St. Louis with the understanding that it would be published in pamphlet form. The convention made no provision for paying the printing bill, and failed to deposit a copy of the document in the office of the Territorial Secretary at Virginia City. The 1866 constitution was never printed, and subsequently vanished without a trace.
Montana's second constitutional convention convened with benefit of legal authority. By joint resolution approved March 7, 1883, the legislative assembly issued a call for a special election to be held the following November for the purpose of choosing forty-five members of a constitutional convention. This convention met in Helena, January 4, 1884, and continued in session until February 9, 1884. It drafted an elaborate constitution to be submitted to the voters the following November and if ratified to be presented to Congress by Territorial Delegate Joseph K. Toole and a special territorial committee. The election showed overwhelming popular approval of the proposed constitution. Although the document was forwarded at once to Delegate Toole, formal presentation to Congress did not occur until January 18, 1886, and then it did not gain congressional approval.

Under the provisions of the Enabling Act, approved by Congress February 22, 1889, the Montana Territorial Legislature provided the necessary machinery for holding the third constitutional convention. This convention convened in Helena, July 4, 1889, and adjourned on August 17. The body consisted of seventy-five members distributed among the sixteen counties of the Territory. Ratification of this constitution came at the election called for that purpose on October 1, and on November 8, 1889, President Harrison issued his proclamation admitting Montana into the Union as a sovereign state. Documents published as a result of these three conventions were as follows:

The 1903 legislative assembly authorized the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind to erect and equip a school for the feeble-minded in Boulder, Montana. The building was completed in October, 1904, and a Department for Feeble-Minded was established by the school on November 10, 1905. The twelfth annual report of the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind, 1906, referred to this department as the Montana School for Backward and Feeble-Minded Children, but Superintendent Milligan objected to the term "Feeble-minded," and it was dropped from the department name by 1907. 1908 saw the implementation of the name "Montana Training School for Backward Children," which was used unofficially in lieu of the objectionable title. Ch. 107, L. 1919, officially established a Montana School for Feeble-Minded Persons in connection with and under the control of the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind at Boulder, Montana. Ch. 43, L. 1937, shortened the name to "Montana State Training School," and placed the institution under the supervisory control of the State Board of Education. The name was changed to "Montana State Training School and Hospital" by Ch. 37, L. 1959. Ch. 266, L. 1963.

House Joint Memorial No. 7, asking for appropriations for a territorial prison passed the House of Representatives of Montana on December 7, 1866. Council Bill No. 24, locating the prison at Deer Lodge was passed on November 13, 1867. A summary of materials used in the compilation of a bibliography must necessarily include collections of books as well as individual volumes. The unit collection for this study was the file of Montana state documents in the Montana Historical Society Library, Helena, Montana. This was supplemented by the collection in the Reference Department at the University of Montana Library, Missoula, Montana. Other sources too numerous to mention included correspondence between librarians concerning state documents, and conversations with state agency personnel, and of course the documents themselves.

Below are listed the various published sources that contributed information on organization of state agencies and state publications. No division is made between books, articles, reports or public documents as the list is so short.
